"This is your day, you have overcome many things that people told you, you couldn't," Bamberg Job Corps Center Director Mitra Vazeen told the center's graduates Friday in her Center's Director Address.

The 76 members of the 2010 BJCC graduating class, dressed in blue caps and gowns, listened attentively has 2nd Congressional District Congressman Joe Wilson, who it was noted was a "strong supporter" of the BJCC delivered the keynote address.

Wilson, the top Republican on the Armed Services Subcommittee on Military Personnel, noted before his keynote address that he had spent "a lot of time in Bamberg" in the former Bamberg National Guard Armory. Wilson recognized former Adjutant General Jasper, who was in attendance at the graduation, along with Carl (also in attendance) and Betty Kilgus and daughter Carol Durgan before his address.

Congressman Wilson spoke briefly to the graduates about what he said he read in "Business Investment Daily" as the ten keys to success. He listed the following habits as being key to a successful life:

Wilson told the graduates "always be positive"; He said be true to your dreams, set your goals and make a list of your goals; He said they should take action on their goals and never stop learning, noting that he always reads six newspapers each day; He said the graduates should be "persistent and work hard"; He told them to "never stop learning from their mistakes" and focus on your time and money; He said the graduates should "not be afraid to be different" and deal with and communicate with people effectively, and finally the Congressman told the graduates to be "honest and dependable and take responsibility" for their actions. "I wish you well," the Congressman said in closing.
